The Cornhill of August publishes an able ! ought to act, and roduces the law as far as of men who are secure of eternal damnation, and of a journal which ought to be given to the flames; but we think he may fairly argue, that in making his opponents richer he is doing them no certain good, and that as to the paper, a Member of Parliament, he would act in con- quiet. cort with Protestants, though he would not talk Protestantism, and why should there be a tionist must not say a word in defence of slavery, but he might, we think, write in paper which holds slavery, under certain circumstances, to be merely a crude form of human society. Tories, as a rule, hold that opinion; but we cannot go the length of declaring that a sincere Abolitionist, such as Lord Palmerston undoubtedly was it was probably the only conviction he had over which his will had no power—could not honestly be a Tory. . The writer excludes the casuistry of editorship from his remarks, and he obviously considers that the commonest of all difficulties, intellectual disagreement between editor and contributor, is now-a-days always settled by the editor selecting the writer who is most nearly in accord with him, but he does not adequately discuss the question of indifferentism. There is more indifferentism among journalists than be thinks. Thousands of points are raised in journals overy year, and some of them important points, upon which the majority of men, trained journalists, included, have no definite views at all, are as caroless as most women which way the matter goes. May he not, when utterly indifferent, write to order, article in demand just like any other dealer? We practice tends gradually to induce an affected into literary swordsmanship,—the worst vice, we agree with the writer, that can degrade a journalist. But still there are men who, profoundly indifferent upon some points are soneitive upon others, and it seems to us that, as regards the former, they are fully at liberty to follow the policy of the paper which employs them, just as the rank and file of a party are fully at liberty to swallow an uppleasant bill which their lander deems imperative. The in: difference must, of course, be real, and not simulated; but if it is real, the mental subordination implied in taking the paper's side does seem to us immoral, or to approximate in any degree to literary swordsmanship, any -more than it does for a journalist to state fairly and frankly the side of a question be dislikes, but has not yet become absolutely convinced upon. As a rate, we should say there are, with every journalist, halfa dozen subjects upon which, if he palters with his convictions in any way, he dogrades himself; and one or two upon which very much larger number upon which he may safely and conscientionally be a mero professional, merging himself in the paper of whose general theory he approves. Of course, this licence does not apply to editors, because their responsibility is personal, but it does to journalists who have confidence in the general drift of their employer's mind. There is a far nicer and more difficult question of casnistry than any the essayist has raised which remains still to be determined. What is the liability of an editor to his personal friends? Strictly speaking, he should have none; should attack his own father if he disupproves his appeales, or lash his wife's last book if he thinks it rubblish. This is, no doubt, abstractly true, as it is also abstractly true to steal an epigram from an Australian who once wrote a pamphlet on the subject—that un editor should live in a cellar;

but in practice men will not comply with either condition, and such demands would drive all the men with hearts and tempers out of the case of a book, unless of the first importance, will not meet that of the grave political action.

We suspect that in the case, as in all others we bave quoted, the practice of Parliament is still'

the best guide, and that the journalist is bound,

as the statesman would be bound, to do his duty, and take the consequences. He might be a little more gentle in his language, a little more upologetio in his tone, but the attack must not be deprived of its efficiency for any personal consideration whatsoover.—Spectator.

MOURNING. ____ Crandated from Victor Hugo, in "Lunden Society Charles, Charles, my son! hast thou thou quitted me Must all fade, nought endure? "Hast vanished in that radiance, clear for thee, But still for us obscure?

My sanset lingers, boy, thy morn declines! Sweet mutual love we've known; For man, alus! plans, dreams, and smiling twin

With others' souls his own. He cries. " This has no end!" pursues his way: He soon is downward bound: He lives, he suffers ; in his grasp one day Mero dust and ushes found. I've wandered twenty years, in distant lands, With sore heart forced to stay : Why fell the blow Pate only understands! God took my home away.

To day one daughter and one son remain Of all my goodly show! Well-night in solitude my dark hours warie God fakes my children now.

Langer, ye two still left me! though decays Our nest, our hearts rollinin :. In-gloom of death your mother silent prays, I in this life of paid.

Martyr of Sion! holding Theo in sight, 1'll dmin this cup of gall, And scale with step resolved that dangerous height Which rather seems agail.

Truth is sufficient guide; no more inan needs Than end so nobly shown. Mourning but brave, I march; where duty leads, TROOK the vast unknown.
